To whom it may concern,

I would like to take a moment here to provide a recommendation for Colin Murray. Colin worked in our organization in the desktop support area for a little less than a year – but he had a tremendously positive impact during his time here as a consultant. He interacted in a regular basis with our business users on the phone, via email and in person. The user community at our organization is diverse – ranging from math oriented PhDs who design and maintain our money management computer models, to portfolio managers, stock & bond traders on the trading desk and to the marketing department and client service groups. He provided VIP white glove service to our CEO and the rest of the C-suite executive team. Universally, the feedback from these communities (especially the C-suite) has been positive and complimentary. This takes a combination of both technical and interpersonal skills – something Colin has in spades!

Outside of the excellent work he has done helping our groups with the day to day setup/add/change/delete of services and equipment, he has done a tremendous job behind the scenes within our Technology group. He proactively updated and organized a large majority of his group's documentation and procedures with a significant amount of high quality and updated information. This is tremendously beneficial for us and is indicative of his personal energy, enthusiasm and self-starting nature

Colin is proactive, highly energetic, intelligent and skilled. He has fantastic people skills and communication skills that I think will stand him in excellent stead as he moves forward with his career. His next career step is moving into a full time role that is very exciting and I wish him all the best. I regret that my organization does not have a role that is the right fit for him on his next step of his career journey. Would I hire him if given the opportunity in the future? I absolutely would – without reservation. I feel comfortable recommending him wholeheartedly to you.

Best regards,

Nicholas Fohl
